Significance of histopathological features in surgical specimens of renal cell carcinoma. To evaluate the histopathological features of renal cell carcinoma (RCC) and the utility of biopsies at the time of initial diagnosis of patients to determine the outcome of surgery. The cases of patients who underwent nephrectomy for RCC at our hospital over a 15-year period were reviewed. The histopathological features of the tumor and the margin status of the tumor were evaluated, and the follow-up time was recorded.

Three hundred and five tumors were included in the study. Clear cell RCC was the most common subtype. Most tumors (254/305, 84.5%) were located in the left kidney. Tumor size ranged from 1.0 to 24.8 cm. Gross features were correlated with size and with tumor type. In patients with tumors larger than 7 cm, multifocality, venous invasion, and lymph node metastasis were more common. In patients with tumors larger than 9 cm, tumor necrosis was more frequent. In tumors smaller than 7 cm, oncocytoma was more frequently noted in younger patients. In patients with tumors less than 2 cm, tumor necrosis was more common. Many patients had more than one tumor, but only one tumor was analyzed per patient. Patients with a higher tumor grade were more likely to have tumors with capsular invasion or necrosis. Gross features of RCC provide us helpful information in planning treatment and prognosis. However, an accurate clinical assessment is imperative. Tumor size, cell type, and tumor grade are the most reliable and useful criteria in determining prognosis. In addition, biopsies at the time of the initial diagnosis of a RCC are helpful to determine the patient's prognosis and to guide the clinician. $(m) \geq \alpha$, the ancilla symbol is at position $s_{-1}^{m+\frac{m}{2}} \alpha$.
