At the same time, there is increasing demand for larger aircraft, particularly with the expansion of the regional airline industry. As such, aircraft are required to have higher performance in order to provide passengers, freight and crew comfort for longer flight durations. The present invention is directed towards providing an aircraft having higher performance in order to meet the growing demand. In order to increase the performance of an aircraft, it is known to provide the aircraft with an engine having a longer rotor arm. One of the disadvantages of having a longer rotor arm is that the centrifugal loading of the engine increases, which requires the engine to be larger than would otherwise be required, and thus the engine occupies more space than would otherwise be necessary. For example, an F100 engine has a maximum length of 45 ft, and an F100-FB engine has a maximum length of 49 ft. An F150 engine has a maximum length of 50 ft, and an F150-FB engine has a maximum length of 51 ft. It is desirable to have engines that occupy less space. The foregoing examples of the related art and limitations related therewith are intended to be illustrative and not exclusive. Other limitations of the related art will become apparent to those of skill in the art upon a reading of the specification and a study of the drawings.
