My objective in writing these lists is not only to share my knowledge but it is intended to help those who wish to try and understand the manual pages and work to emulate them in any way that they can. The intent is to pick apart the pieces of the document and share how I reached my conclusions, and perhaps to help others do the same - so here we go... So let's assume that a level 10 alchemist wishes to join this level ten cleric. Specifically, she wishes to advance in level 10 spellcasting by following your advice here or here. Seeing as she seems to be a money-loving alchemist, she's aiming to start a level 10 spellcasting campaign rather than a level 15 campaign. Firstly, let's observe the process of advance from 2E into 5E. From 2E to 3E - The Player's Handbook Chapter One - The Players' Handbook for 5E has two lists on pages 9 and 12 that feature the usual opening for a new player's directory of new spells. These spell lists are edited to fit 5E, and offer an easy to understand list of spells that can be cast. The first of these lists features spells that can be cast at 9th level. The second list features spells that can be cast at 13th level. However, 5E is not meant to be a granular game in the way that most other editions are. That is to say, it is not a strict progression in terms of levelling. Instead, it is a progression between classes. "Regional expertise". For example, a regular 2E class level would be that set of spells from 9th level to 13th, and so on. The dailies are a progression of finer effects, and are divided into four categories: Adventurer, Social, Ritual and

Profession. Each has a set progression from dailies 1 through 3, one per day. Each day, success can be attained for a success point - the actual levelling mechanism used in the game - depending on your success level in the relevant category. The adventure dailies 1-3 set the spell levels for gaining the adventure dailies. It's worth mentioning that the spell levels themselves are what determine whether you've reached the level cap for each spell. The adventure dailies themselves are pointless if you've no idea what adventures you're playing (and even putting aside 'interest', you should create your own adventures and share

Dwarves are cute, right? Dwarves are clean, right? Dwarves have beer, right? This is the result of combining the two. Taphouse VR is a game where you are invited to travel with a dwarf to different taverns in the Dwarf City. Over the course of a few beers, you can meet different dwarves and fulfil a variety of quests. Your journey begins when you arrive at the entrance of the Dwarf City. The scale of the Dwarf City is only partially revealed. You simply have to enter, and there are no savegames or loading screens. You will meet a selection of different unique dwarves. Each dwarf has his own personality and is uniquely suited for a particular quest. A variety of quests await you in Taphouse VR. Stress-induced elevation of intracellular Ca²⁺ activates ERK and JNK and leads to HSP27 phosphorylation in Müller cells. Ca(2+)-calmodulin-dependent kinase II (CaMKII) is a ubiquitous Ca(2+)-activated serine/threonine kinase which participates in ocular stress responses. It is known that induced stress induces heat shock protein (HSP) expression and the phosphorylation of HSP proteins. Here we report elevated Ca²⁺ is coupled to inositol triphosphate-induced ERK phosphorylation and activation of JNK in cultured rat retinal Müller cells. Exposure to micromolar concentrations of Ca²⁺ transiently activated ERK and JNK and phosphorylated HSP27 (heat shock protein 27). Inhibition of ERK and JNK by biochemical reagents, selective siRNAs, or transfection with constructs expressing dominant negative mutants of Ras, Raf, or MEK prevented Ca(2+)-inducible HSP27 phosphorylation and prevented HSP27
